From the City Manager. . .

As I write this, we are five short days away from Christmas. Many of us are still scrambling around to get last minute gifts for friends and family, and children are starting to get that rush of excitement and anticipation that we all remember so fondly at this special time of year.

As a child, I thought that nothing in world compared to the joy of opening Christmas presents. Even today, I still get excited watching my children's faces as they tear through the wrapping paper to see what Santa brought. However, my real joy, and one of the true blessings of the season, is to see people selflessly helping those in need.

All around us we can see examples of people taking time out of their busy lives to help their fellow man. I've seen our city employees work with Hands of Mercy to make sure hundreds of people in our community had a warm meal for the holidays, witnessed them help with Operation Reach to provide a bright Christmas for children who may otherwise not have one, and seen them take pride in bringing new life to old bicycles, which will no doubt bring smiles to the faces of many on Christmas morning. I could certainly name other examples of our employees giving of themselves to help others, not because they had to but because they wanted to.

Seeing our employees do their jobs well is a testament to what good workers they are. The way they help others shows what good human beings they are. I feel blessed to be associated with such a wonderful group of men and women, and I want to thank them for everything they do to help make our city a better place for all.

Ours is not a perfect world. One only needs to watch the evening news to see that violence, poverty, disease and hate are far more prevalent than we wish they were. Despite the problems we see around the world, and the troubles we all have in our own lives, we only need to take the time to look around us to see all that is good in our lives. To borrow from the late Alex Haley, let us all make an extra effort this holiday season, and beyond, to "find the good and praise it".

On behalf of the City of Kingston, I'd like to extend to each of you, and to each of your families, my best wishes for a very Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to come.
